Sustainable Growth in Dutch Flower Bulbs

A Commitment to Innovation, Quality and Responsibility

The Dutch flower bulb sector is known worldwide for its quality, innovation, and iconic status. But global leadership brings responsibility. That is why the KAVB is fully committed to sustainable development in floriculture.

We are proud of the progress made. Since 1995, environmental impact from crop protection has been reduced by 80%. Growers now use less water, fewer chemicals, and significantly less energy. Still, our ambition reaches further.

Sustainability in our sector starts with healthy soil. We invest in long-term soil health, natural alternatives to soil disinfection, and resistant flower bulb varieties. Innovative techniques like bulb coating and CATT (Controlled Atmosphere Temperature Treatment) enable more efficient and environmentally friendly crop protection.

Water quality is another priority. The sector aims for a 98% reduction in norm violations. We are achieving this through drift-reducing spray technology, emission control on farms, and advanced water purification systems.

Sustainability also means connection. We promote open dialogue between growers and their communities, and support agreements that balance business and local concerns.

The KAVB believes in a floriculture sector that is economically strong, environmentally sound, and socially responsible. Together with growers, researchers, and policymakers, we are building a sustainable future for Dutch flower bulbs—clean, resilient, and proud.
